Notes:

- After leaving school in Jimboomba, Edwin Francis spent the first part of his working life driving a steam tractor in the Jimboomba district hauling logs to sawmills. About 1914 he moved to Longreach where he purchased a 1912 Daimler truck and started carting wool from the various sheep stations to the railhead at Longreach. Edwin met and married Ivy Agnes Bowman in 1918. At this time he was serving, in Queensland, with the Army. After his discharge in 1918 Edwin, his wife and son, moved back to Longreach where he built a house in Kingfisher Street and continued with his wool carrying business. About 1920 Edwin bought a new truck (Carrier). Both this and his original Daimler were of the solid rubber tyre type. In 1920 Edwin's second child, a daughter, was born and in 1922 his wife died in the Longreach hospital. Edwin's married sister, Mrs Eva Sheriff, and her family moved into his house to look after his children. Edwin then moved to Yaraka, south of Longreach, which was the railhead at the end of the Blackall rail line. He started his carrying business with a vehicle repair section and was assisted by a partner, Mr. Ned Drury, who drove the trucks on a full time basis. Around 1928 Edwin contacted various property owners on the west side of the Barcoo River and, with their help, he constructed two crossings over the Barcoo River channels called the 'Arno Crossings'. These allowed much easier access to the Yaraka railhead. In 1928 Mrs Sheriff moved her family to Yeppoon taking Edwin's two children with her. About this time Edwin married again and moved to Sydney. However the marriage did not last and he returned to Yaraka and continued with his business. Edwin brought his son, Arthur, to Yaraka in 1932 to finish his schooling and to help in the business. In 1936 Arthur went to work on various sheep stations and in 1938 Edwin and his partner decided to close the business down. He moved to Palmwoods where he purchased a garage and service station. Edwin Francis sold his Palmwoods business and retired to the Brisbane suburb of Gumdale. In 1964 he was involved in an accident between his cycle and a vehicle. He died shortly after in the Princess Alexandra Hospital.

33. FAMILY TREES

Each family tree shows the reported children, parents, grandparents and great-grandparents of a family group. In order to reduce redundancy, any family group which is wholly included within another family tree may not be reported separately.

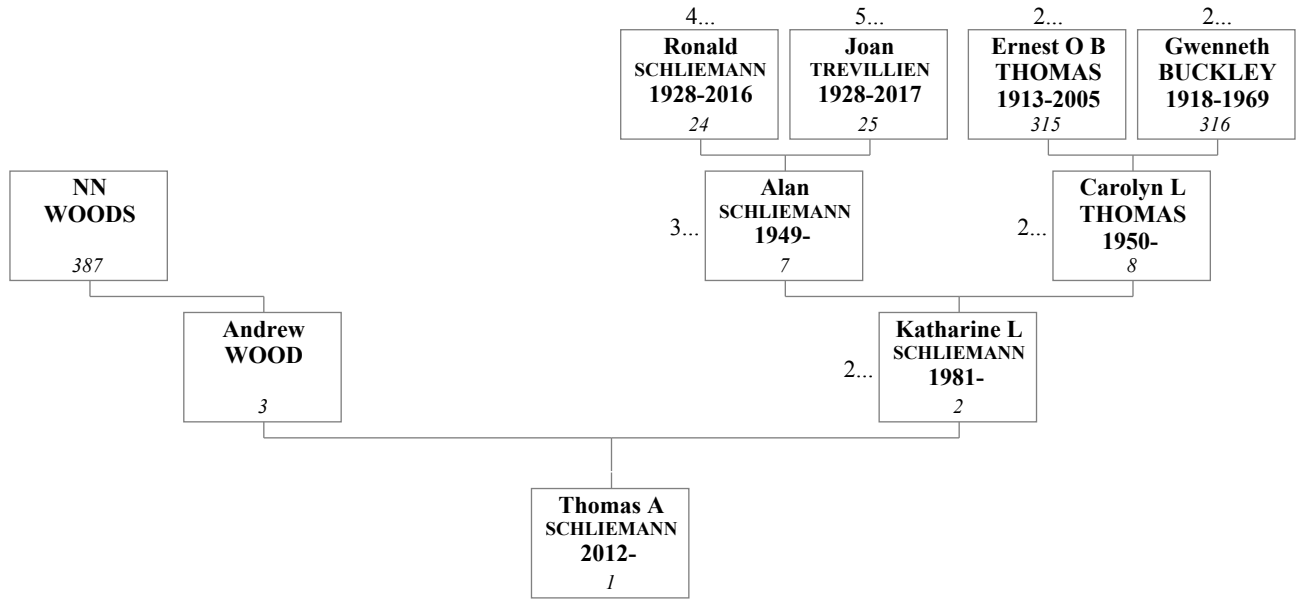

Above each of the great-grandparent boxes (top row), a continuation family tree reference number is shown if the great-grandparent is recorded as a child in the continuation tree. A continuation reference number is also shown to the left of a grandparent or parent box if that individual has siblings reported in the continuation tree; and beneath a child box (bottom row) if that individual has children reported in the continuation tree.

In cases of multiple marriages, a continuation reference number preceded by "=" is shown to the right of a parent box. This number references the previous and/or next tree in which that individual is shown with another partner.

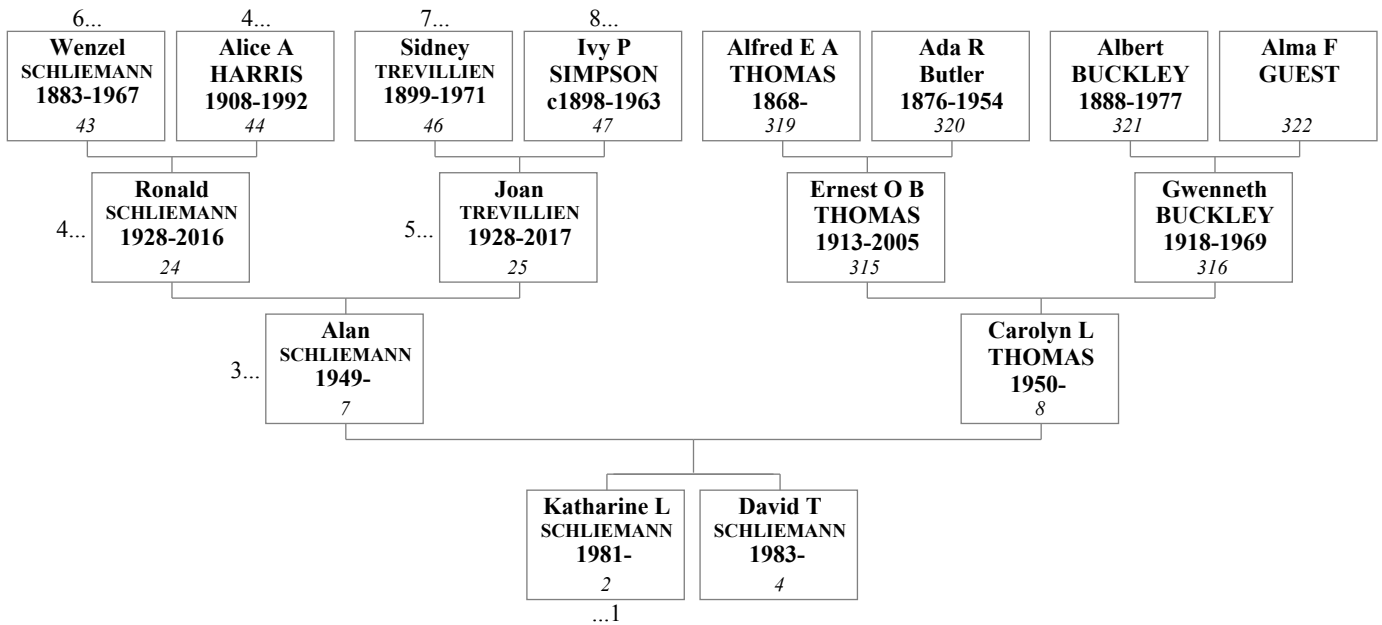

In cases of adopted (or fostered) children, the parental connection is shown with a dashed line and a continuation reference number preceded by "=" is shown within the individual's box. This number references the tree in which that individual is shown with his or her natural parents.

The district given in a record refers primarily to an electoral district, city, or township within New South Wales; however, the point of reference may also be a street or intersection. The vast majority of the marriages took place in New South Wales, with a small minority that took place in Queensland, Tasmania, or elsewhere.

3. "Denmark Church Records, 1576-1919" in "MyHeritage"
The Lutheran Church in Denmark began keeping vital records in 1645 after the king issued a royal decree requiring the clergy on the island of Sjælland to record baptisms, marriages, and burials. The same decree was issued the following year (1646) to the rest of the kingdom. Some ministers had been keeping vital records much earlier with the earliest parish records starting in 1572 in the city of Nakskov. After the events of the Reformation the Danish Crown recognized only the Evangelical Lutheran Church, with a few exceptions. The Reformed Church was recognized in 1747 and established Jewish congregations were recognized in 1814. In 1849 the Danish constitution recognized additional Christian dissenter churches, but it required that all denominations notify the minister of their local Lutheran parish of all births and deaths occurring in their congregations. In 1814 standardized and form-based registers were produced and issued to the Lutheran clergy to aid in the collection of these records. Records produced prior to this were free-form paragraphs and registers, with formatting varying clergy to clergy. In the early church books, there is also variation in the order the records were kept—sometimes events (baptism, marriage, burial, etc.) were recorded in strict chronological order regardless of event, and sometimes events were broken out into separate sections, and then recorded chronologically. In the beginning of the vital record keeping practices in Denmark the requirement was limited to baptisms, marriages, and burials. Confirmations started to be recorded in 1736. In the early 1800s Denmark suffered a severe smallpox epidemic, which resulted in a vaccination law that went into effect on March 4, 1810. Clergy were often trained to administer vaccinations and recorded these events in their parish registers. Around 1812 some parishes also began keeping track of individuals moving in and out of their parish. Other types of church records include introductions, absolutions, and communions. A brief explanation of each record type is given below: Birth (Født) or Baptisms (Døbte) – Children were normally baptized (or "christened") within a few days of birth. Birth or baptismal registers usually contain the infant's and parent's names, legitimacy, date, and names of witnesses and godparents. Sometimes the child's birth date, the father's occupation, and the family's exact place of residence is listed. In the pre-printed registers, male and female births were usually recorded separately. Marriages (Copulerde or Viede) – Marriage records contain the marriage date along with the names of the bride and groom and their residences. After 1814 it is common for these records to include additional information about the bride and groom such as their ages, occupations, names of their fathers, and sometimes birthplaces. Finally, these records may indicate whether they were single or widowed and gives names of witnesses who were often (but not always) other family members. Death (Døde) or Burials (Begravede) – Burials usually took place with a few days of death. Burials in Denmark were recorded in the records of the parish where the burial occurred. Burial registers provide the deceased's name, death or burial date, place of burial, and age at death. After 1814 the records may include the deceased's place of residence, cause of death, and names of survivors or next-of-kin. Sometimes the deceased's birth date, birth place, and parents' names are given. Post-1814 records were kept in separate lists for males and females. Confirmations (Konfirmerede or Confirmerede) – In 1736 the Church required that young people be instructed in the Lutheran catechism and pass a simple examination by the minister before taking their first communion—normally at about the age of 14. Confirmation records contain the person's name, residence, and sometimes age. After 1814 the records are separated into lists for males and females, and include the parents' names and sometimes the date and place of the person's birth or christening. Vaccinations (Vaccinerede) – The vaccination mandate began in 1810 required everyone to receive the smallpox vaccine, unless the person at already had the pox. Vaccinations typically occurred when children were quite young. These records usually list the name of the person receiving the vaccine, date of vaccination, their father's name, and their age or birth date. A person's vaccination date could also be recorded in their confirmation record, and if they ever moved, could be noted in their moving in or moving out record. Moving In (Tilgangsliste) and Moving Out (Afgangliste) Records – Began in 1812 and list individuals moving in or moving out of a parish. These records may contain name, age or birth date, occupation, residence, vaccination date, moving date, and where moving to/from. Introductions (Introduserede) – After a woman gave birth, she was considered "unclean" and had to be reintroduced into the congregation. The woman may be listed directly (by her name), or indirectly (by her husband's name, e.g. "wife of"). Absolutions – Certain transgressions had to be absolved by the church. The most common absolution was for pre-marital sex resulting in a pregnancy, in which case both parties had to be publically absolved before they could return to the congregation. Other transgressions that could be absolved included failing to receive communion regularly, public drunkenness, violence, blasphemy, theft, and murder. These records were kept up until about 1767. Communions (Confirmerede) – These records recorded who received communion on a given day. Sometimes individuals were recorded in family groups with only the head of the family listed by name, and the other individuals in the family being referenced by number and relationship to the head. For example, "Hans Jensen and wife and 2 sons and a daughter". Surnames and Searching: Surnames in Danish genealogy can be quite confusing. Patronymic surnames—surnames constructed using the given name of the person's father appended with either "-sen" (son) or "-datter" (daughter)—were legally abolished in 1826, at which time the government wanted people to adopt family surnames instead. However, it took several decades before patronymic surnames stopped being used completely; in fact, most ordinary people used patronymics through the mid-19th century. For this reason, it is impossible for a researcher to know which surname an individual might be recorded under in records dating from 1826 up to about 1870. Because of this, MyHeritage has augmented records behind-the-scenes, for records dating from 1826 to 1870, with both surnames. Regardless of which surname you search for your ancestor under, this behind-the-scenes work will help surface the best matches for your search, but may show search results that initially look incorrect. Dates: Early Danish church records often recorded event dates as a Feast Date. Feast Dates are based on the liturgical calendar, rather than on the Julian or Gregorian calendars. Denmark used the Julian calendar up until February 18, 1700, and began using the Gregorian calendar on March 1, 1700. When possible, MyHeritage has converted Feast Dates to the corresponding Julian or Gregorian date. For example, a record may give the date of “6 p. Epiphany 1698”, but this has been translated to “February 13, 1698”. This collection is provided in partnership with the Danish National Archives (Rigsarkivet).

4. "England & Wales, Birth Index, 1837-2005" in "MyHeritage"

Civil registration — the government recording of births, marriages, and deaths — began in England and Wales on 1 July 1837. Local registration districts had jurisdiction for recording civil events, but were required to send copies of their records each quarter to the General Register Office (GRO) in London. The GRO created indexes to these records which are organized by event, year, and quarter, and thereunder alphabetically by surname. Information included in the index changed over the years. From inception up to June 1911, the birth index lists: name of child, registration district, and reference information (volume and page numbers). Since September 1911 the index also includes the mother's maiden surname. Information provided in the index can be used to order a copy of the person's birth certificate for a fee from the GRO through their Certificate Ordering Service. Depending on the year, full birth certificates may provide: name of child, birth date, birthplace, sex, father's name and occupation, mother's maiden name, informant's name, residence, and relationship to the child, and date of registration. Note: For years where images of the index are available, be sure to consult the image to verify the information presented to you. Sometimes errors happen during the transcription process. For example, a "5" may have inadvertently been transcribed as a "3". Since there is a fee for ordering certificate copies from the GRO, it is especially important to make sure all reference numbers are correct before placing an order. Search tip: Compliance with registration laws have always been very good. It is estimated that initially about 90-95% of births were reported, but that by 1875 registration was 99%. Since nearly all births were reported, if you are having trouble finding someone in the index, try searching using various given names or initials. In later years, searching on the combination of child's surname and mother's maiden name (if known), may also help locate difficult-to-find individuals. If an individual can still not be found, especially in earlier years, try searching local parish records for the child's baptismal record.

Civil registration — the government recording of births, marriages, and deaths — began in England and Wales on 1 July 1837. Local registration districts had jurisdiction for recording civil events, but were required to send copies of their records each quarter to the General Register Office (GRO) in London. The GRO created indexes to these records which are organized by event, year, and quarter, and thereunder alphabetically by surname. Information included in the index changed over the years. The index always provides the name of deceased, registration district, and reference information (volume and page numbers). From 1866 to March 1969, the index also includes age. Beginning in June 1969 the index includes the deceased's birth date rather than age. Information provided in the index can be used to order a copy of the person's death certificate for a fee from the GRO through their Certificate Ordering Service. Depending on the year, full death certificates may provide: name of deceased, death date, death place, age, sex, occupation, cause of death, name of parent if the deceased is a child, informant's name, residence, and relationship to the deceased, and date of registration. Note: Information recorded on a death certificate is only as accurate as the knowledge of the person reporting it. It is important to pay attention to who the informant was and their relationship to the deceased. The closer the relationship, the more reliable the information likely is. For years where images of the index are available, be sure to consult the image to verify the information presented to you. Sometimes errors happen during the transcription process. For example, a "5" may have inadvertently been transcribed as a "3". Since there is a fee for ordering certificate copies from the GRO, it is especially important to make sure all reference numbers are correct before placing an order. Search tip: If an individual had multiple given names, sometimes only one or two of these names was recorded in the index. In addition, some of the given names may have been recorded by initials only. If you're having trouble locating someone in the index, try searching by any of the individual's known given names, initials, or nicknames.

Depending on the year, full marriage certificates may provide: marriage date and place, names of the bride and the groom, their ages, marital status, professions, and residences. Information about the bride's and groom's fathers — names, occupations, and whether deceased—may also be listed. A marriage record typically indicates whether the marriage ceremony took place in a church and if so, the denomination.
